

Paul's head kicking:

By John.

The results showed it was a very close game on Sunday, 7-6 for Conrado's team over the enemy. The difference was probably Paul (the tall Paul) who put in two brilliant headers, the second one bringing the game to an end. Tall Paul has been rapidly becoming a key player on Sunday, initially he was so polite and nice; now he is starting to realize that he is better than most of us, twice our size, twice as strong and fit, so it is safe to say we are in trouble. That also means that other players with the fitness, skill and agility (like Nacho or Julio) will have to mark him tightly.

There was some outstanding corner kicking this time around. The premier corner kicker of the games, Nacho, has taken the corner kicking duties very personally since he was challenged by don Julio Olimpico Acosta, after Julio's famous goal from a corner kick about a month ago. Although Nacho often times interprets the position of the corner quite liberally (i.e. it looks more like a free kick than a corner), he is quite talented at corners (or is it lucky?).

Extra, extra: Nacho may transfered !! (read all about it !!)

Reuters.

The word on the street is that Nacho may be signing a contract with the team of his heart, Independiente de Avellaneda, because they need someone, anyone, to take them out of LAST PLACE in the Argentina league, yes, Independiente is in DEAD LAST.

The missing men:

By John.

Two thirds of the Editorial board went missing on Sunday, Wendy decided to stay away after finding out that the macho men of the games (John, Mariano, and Victor) would not be there, so she assumed (quite correctly) that the quality of plan would not be up to the usual standards. John was participating in a tournament, which his team got knocked out very rapidly by players half his age, and contrary to rumors he was not voted the worst goalkeeper of the tournament.

There was also of course the notable absences of Victor (out for work) and Mariano (probably another injured ankle during his nighttime dancing activities), This probably made the team picking quite easier, as Nacho can't play his usual game of taking one of them out the night before and getting them drunk, and then choosing the other player (who we assume was less hung over on Sunday morning).

Au Revoir, mes amis..

By Paul Massiani

"I have left Singapore at the end of 2001, and after traveling in Asia and Australia for a few months I'm back in my home country France. I believe I won't be able to join the Sunday football games anymore: for sure I would do almost anything to join the game every week and have great fun with you guys, but I would have to travel overnight from Paris which won't be very cheap and relaxing...

So please remove my name from your distribution list, because it hurts me a lot to be reminded every week that I'm missing the great game!

Have a lot of fun, and I hope I'll see you again sometimes!

Cheers,

Paul."
